Goldberg Finds Pope And State Heads In Sympathy With U.S. Peace Aim

Arthur J. Goldberg said in Rome that he had "found great understanding" of United States peace aims in Vietnam. He said he had found such understanding in conversations with Pope Paul VI and with Italian leaders, reports Robert C. Doty, in the New York Times. The Pontiff and state leaders, he added, also were aware of the intransigence of the North Vietnamese, which he said had prompted the recent bombings in the Hanoi-Haiphong area.

Ambassador Goldberg, chief United States representative at the United Nations, declined to answer directly questions as to whether the Pope and Italian leaders had expressed to him concern over the bombing evident in earlier statements by Vatican and Government sources.

But he said that now that the facts had come to light, "I found great understanding on the part of all to whom I spoke of the great and continuing efforts of the United States to achieve a peaceful settlement." He cited as one of these facts evidence that civilian casualties had been "miniscule."

There was similar recognition, he added, of "the intransigence we still encounter on the part of our adversaries in Vietnam and of the reasons — in the face of this intransigence expressed in increased infiltration and warlike action by the other side — for our past and recent military activities."

These, he emphasized, were only his impressions and should not be interpreted as a precise citation of the views of the Pope, President Giuseppe Saragat, Premier Aldo Moro, or the Foreign Minister, Amintore Fanfani. They could give their own interpretation of the talks he had with them in the three days, the Ambassador said.

The main purpose of his visit to Italy, he said at a news conference, had been to discuss pending United Nations matters with the Italian Government, notably with Mr. Fanfani, who is the holdover President of the 1965 General Assembly.

But, Mr. Goldberg said it was inevitable that when the first news reports of the bombings at the two North Vietnamese cities appeared, there would be "concern by everyone, throughout the world," says the New York Times. Discussion of the war in Vietnam, therefore, had been in the foreground of his meetings in Rome, he added.

"The Pope is a man of peace and is concerned with every aspect of the Vietnam war," Mr. Goldberg said. "He has made it clear in public declarations that all killing should stop, an objective that my Government fully shares."

Mr. Goldberg reiterated the United States desire to sit down at a conference, within the Geneva format or any other, at which the first order of business could be cessation of hostilities.

Instead, he said, the increase in the rate of North Vietnamese infiltration of regular units into the South, from 4,500 a month to 7,500 a month in the last six months, have dictated the necessity for cutting the oil supplies that power such movements. This had been carried out "with virtually no civilian casualties," he said.

This assertion was supported, he said, by the absence of any claims of great civilian losses by Hanoi.

Mr. Goldberg stressed the importance of the coming United Nations conference in Geneva on peaceful uses of space and of the concordance of American and Italian views on this subject.

Rabbi Headed Council Of Torah Sages In Israel

Rabbi Zalman Sorotzkin, chairman of the Council of Torah Sages, died in Jerusalem. He was eighty-six years old. Many thousands of persons, mainly black-hatted yeshiva students, followed his bier at the funeral. Cabinet ministers, national officials, and leading rabbis were also among the mourners.

The Council of Torah Sages is a body of eighteen rabbis recognized by the Ultra-Orthodox Agudat Israel party as its supreme authority in political matters. Knesset (Parliament) members and Cabinet Ministers, when the party is in the Government, says the New York Times, present themselves regularly to the Council for guidance. They are bound by the decisions of the rabbis who are considered to have no vested or mundane interests and to be guided only by the principles of Torah law.

Rabbi Sorotzkin was chairman of the Council for fifteen years. He was born in Niyuchucina, White Russia, where his father was a rabbi for sixty years. At the age of seventeen, he left home to study at the famous Yeshiva of Volozhin. Later, he moved to the Yeshiva of Telz.

The head of the Telz Yeshiva, Rabbi Eliezer Gordon, was so impressed by his talents that he chose him as a husband for his daughter.

Rabbi Sorotzkin later held various pulpits in Poland and was a member of the Sejm (Parliament) in the nineteen-twenties. He was one of three rabbis recognized by the Polish Government as competent to ordain new rabbis.

He was the rabbi of Lutsk in 1939 when the Nazis invaded Poland. He then fled to Palestine. Shortly after his arrival, he organized a council of yeshivas such as existed in Poland and Lithuania to coordinate fund-raising. Later, he established a network of ultra-religious parochial schools for boys and girls that now comprises 26 institutions with 45,000 pupils.

He is survived by five sons, all of them rabbis. Two of his sons live in Cleveland, Ohio, where they head the Yeshiva of Telz. His only daughter perished in World War II, and his wife died in Jerusalem.

Because of his strong religious beliefs, Rabbi Sorotzkin declined to enter an Israeli hospital when he became ill for fear that an autopsy might be performed on his body if he died, says the New York Times. The religious objection to autopsies is linked with the belief in the resurrection of the dead after the coming of the Messiah.

RE-EMERGENCE OF EXTREMIST NATIONALISM IN GERMANY, LED BY FORMER NAZIS, CASTS SHADOW OVER W.J.C. ASSEMBLY IN BRUSSELS

The World Jewish Congress, meeting in Brussels, expressed "its deep disquiet at the re-emergence in Germany of extremist nationalism in the political field led by former Nazis. Delegates to the fifth plenary assembly of the Congress drawn from fifty-four nations, says Edward Cowan, in the New York Times, also voiced concern about "the resurgence of anti-Semitic activity in various parts of the world."

A resolution drew attention to "international organizations, some public and some clandestine, which seek to co-ordinate the agitation of national groups and to disseminate racist and anti-Semitic material throughout the world."

A Congress spokesman, in reply to an inquiry, said that the resolution referred to individuals and right-wing groups in the United States, Britain, and elsewhere, including the John Birch Society and the Ku Klux Klan.

He said that the Klan had sent documents in Spanish from Waco, Texas, to Latin America and that the material was anti-Semitic, anti-Roman Catholic, and anti-Negro.

Delegates urged the Soviet Union to give the three million Jews in that country "the same rights and facilities as are enjoyed by other [Soviet national] groups, religious and cultural."

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, who was re-elected president of the Congress, said at a news conference that because of "enforced assimilation" the younger generation of Soviet Jews "may be lost as active members of the Jewish people."

They have, he said, "no schools, no synagogues, no rabbis, no Hebrew, nothing." He observed that the Soviet Jewish community was second in size only to the five and a half million Jews in the United States.

Dr. Goldmann said that the Congress, which seeks to promote the well-being of Jews everywhere, would devote special attention "to securing the Jewishness of the younger generation" in all countries, says the New York Times. As anti-Semitism has waned, he said, young people have tended to become less aware of themselves as Jews.

Also re-elected at the concluding session of the ten-day meeting were the Congress's vice-presidents, Samuel Bronfman, of Montreal, and Lord Sieff, of Britain.

The resolution on Germany said that the electoral gains of the right-wing National Democratic party "must be seen against the background of continuing anti-Jewish manifestations, including the daubing of Nazi swastikas, the desecration of cemeteries, and the dissemination of anti-Semitic material in the press and in publications."

Dr. Eugen Gerstenmaier, president of the West German Bundestag, or lower house of Parliament, told the delegates that such deeds were "a favorite pastime of young rascals who do not even know what anti-Semitism is. But they know well enough that nothing can make the citizens and public opinion of Germany as nervous as provocation with an anti-Semitic tinge," he added.

A resolution on peace and disarmament called on "all parties in the Vietnam war "to enter into negotiations." Dr. Goldmann said that the American delegates were divided on the Vietnam issue.

Other resolutions called for more aid to underdeveloped countries; spoke of "the goodwill" of an overwhelming majority of Christian ecclesiastics; deplored "the continued refusal of the neighboring Arab states to negotiate peace with Israel", and expressed a hope for more contacts with Jewish communities in Eastern Europe.

Jewish leaders from dozens of nations paid tribute at Malines, Belgium, in the rain to their brethren who perished under the Nazis.

Nearly two hundred rabbis and other delegates to the World Jewish Congress boarded buses in Brussels before 9 A.M. for the 35-minute ride to Malines.

They massed in the street before a gray stone plaque that reads: "Belgians, remember that from this barracks 24,161 Jews were deported to the camps of Germany, 1942-44." The plaque is mounted on the wall of an army post.

A man wearing the blue-and-white striped uniform of Auschwitz, the Nazi extermination camp, said about eleven hundred of the deported people came back from the camps, says the New York Times. The seven-minute religious service was simple. Rabbi Pinjas Jablenberg, chief chaplain of the Belgian army, chanted Scripture and prayers in Hebrew and French.

The possibility that one day there will be a more normal relationship between Jews and Germany was broached in cautious terms by prominent Germans and Jews.

More than five hundred delegates to the fifth plenary assembly of the World Jewish Congress packed the Palais des Congres for a tense discussion titled "Germans And Jews: An Unresolved Problem."

The fact that rabbis and lay leaders from fifty countries were willing to attend the discussion was regarded as an achievement.

Representatives of two Israeli parties, the left-wing Mapam, and the right-wing Herut, protested the inclusion of such a topic on the agenda as well as the appearance of Dr. Eugen Gerstenmaier, President of the West German Bundestag.

Dr. Gerstenmaier and other speakers suggested that reconciliation between Germans and Jews might not be for this generation. The West German leader said that as long as "the burden of history is upon us, there are limits to our tongues and to our behavior that we Germans cannot cross even if our heart impels us. Anti-Semitism and Hitlerism are not significant forces in West Germany now".

The West German Chancellor, Dr. Ludwig Erhard, in a message of greeting, expressed the hope that the exchange of views would "develop the basis for mutual understanding and esteem."

Mayor Willy Brandt, of West Berlin, and three other leaders of the opposition Social Democratic party in West Germany welcomed the Congress's decision to discuss "the problems of the German-Jewish relationship." They said they hoped that "an honest discussion will help to find the proper steps that can be taken together for the future."

Of several participants preceding Dr. Gerstenmaier, two, both Germans, evoked in hard terms the history of Nazi persecution of Jews and war-making. They were Golo Mann, son of the late Thomas Mann, the novelist, says the New York Times, and Prof. Karl Jaspers, the philosopher, both of whom live in Switzerland. Dr. Jaspers was not present. His speech was distributed as a conference paper.

Dr. Mann, referring to the Germany of the nineteen-thirties and forties declared: "I can never fully trust my compatriots, the Germans, I can never fully trust human beings, as the Germans are also human beings, highly civilized Europeans."

Dr. Gerstenmaier explicitly endorsed this passage.

Salo W. Baron, professor of Jewish studies at Columbia University, said: "If such 'hereditary enemies' as France and Germany could finally bury their hatchets, one may perhaps look forward to the establishment of more normal — and not only 'correct' — relationships between Germans and Jews as well."

Rabbi Joachim Prinz, of Newark, New Jersey, president of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, said, "we can talk to each other, and indeed we must, but the relationship between the Germans and Jews of our generation can never be normalized."

Dr. Nahum Goldmann, president of the fifty-year-old Congress, which seeks to protect the rights and interests of Jews everywhere, permitted opponents of the dialogue to open the program.

An American, Avraham Schenker, speaking for the Mapam party, called on the German people to "reject from their midst the Nazis of yesterday and today — from official positions and from the cultural life, economy, civil service, and the judiciary," says the New York Times. He added that they "must give up the dreams of a great-power Germany armed with atomic weapons."

Isaac Remba, an Israeli speaking for Herut, was applauded when he said: "Between us and the Germans there rises a high mountain which cannot be scaled —, a pile of six million martyrs."

Nearly every speaker used the figure six million, the number of European Jews who perished at the hands of the Nazis.

Dr. Goldmann, who left Germany after Hitler came to power, replied that West Germany was "a big power and it's becoming a bigger power."

"We cannot conduct world and Jewish policies ignoring Germany," he said.

The words "reconcile," "forget" and "forgive," he said, "have nothing to do with this discussion. The purpose is to find a way of coexistence," he said, adding: "It is very difficult for this generation of the camps, a generation that has lost a third of its sons and daughters."

Prof. Gershom Scholem, of the Hebrew University at Jerusalem, said forgetting was impossible.

"Only in remembering the past," he said, "the meaning of which our minds will never be able to penetrate, can there be a new hope for the restitution of a newly found speech between Germans and Jews — that is, for the reconciliation of those who are now separated," says the New York Times. A spokesman for Jews living in Germany said anti-Semitism had been increasing but would become a major problem only if there were "a severe economic setback."

Hendrik George Van Dam, secretary general of the Central Council of Jews in Germany, reported that there were about 26,000 Jews in West Germany and West Berlin as against 200,000 in 1946.

Dr. Gerstenmaier began by expressing doubt that a German could "make his voice heard across the abyss that separates Jews from Germans."

Speaking in German, he said he held "no illusions about the historic burden and the human conse-

Gewurz, 6525 Wilderton Avenue, took place at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel, on Saturday, March 26, at six o'clock, Rabbi Charles Bender officiating, assisted by Cantor J. Rosenzweig. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She was gowned in white, lace, cut with a square neckline; long sleeves; and A-line skirt with a long train. Her tulle illusion veil was placed by a pillbox hat; and she carried a prayer book with white orchids and lilies-of-the valley. Miss Hannah Wrubel, of Israel, was maid of honour, wearing a gold-coloured, sleeveless, gown of peau de soie; with a hat to match; and carried a bouquet of white, and gold-tinted carnations. Bridesmaids were: Misses Nadine Wachberg, cousin of the bride, in a yellow peau de soie gown; Tamar Garmaise, in green peau de soie; Miriam Garmaise, and Pearl Garmaise, in yellow peau de soie; nieces of the groom. They had matching headbands; and carried nosegays of white, and gold-tinted carnations. Samuel Gewurz was his brother's best man. The ushers were: Julius Salz, of Mexico City, Mexico; Bernard Eckstein, Pinches Eisenberg, Myer Samuels, and Simon Margel; cousins of the groom; and Arthur Garmaise, brother-in-law of the groom. Ronald Wachberg, aged seven years, cousin of the bride, was ring-bearer. White, and red roses, and gold-toned carnations, and pom-poms were the wedding flowers. There was orchestra music. One hundred and twenty guests were received. Mrs. Laufer, mother of the bride, wore a green, silk sheath gown; with a green hat. Mrs. Gewurz, mother of the groom, wore a gold-coloured, silk gown; and a hat of that shade. Their flowers were corsages of gold-tinted orchids. Mr. and Mrs. Werner Gewurz spent their wedding trip at the Ritz Plaza Hotel, in Miami Beach, Florida; having flown via Eastern Air Lines; the bride going away in a blue, and white, check wool suit; with a corsage of white orchids. They have taken up residence at 900 Rockland Avenue. Here for the marriage were: parents of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Eckstein, uncle, and aunt of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Eckstein, cousins of the groom; all of Mexico City, Mexico; uncle, and aunts of the bride: Mr. and Mrs. E. Rosenblum and son, Moishe Rosenblum, of Toronto, Ont.; Mrs. S. Laufer, of Lakewood, N. J.; Mrs. A. Laufer, Mr. and Mrs. M. Laufer, Mr. and Mrs. J. Engel, Mr. and Mrs. B. Rubinstein, all of New York, all cousins of the bride; and Mr. and Mrs. E. Sussman, cousin of the groom, of Ottawa, Ont.

MONTREAL MEETINGS

★ CANADIAN JEWISH ★

Congress: Michael Garber, Q.C., at a meeting of the national executive committee said that he was gratified at the statement given at a press conference by the Prime Minister, the Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson, indicating that the Canadian Government would soon introduce a bill to outlaw racist propaganda and hate literature. Mr. Garber stated that the United Kingdom, which is considered a fountain of principles of civil liberties and free speech, recognizes in its Race Relations Bill that such propaganda must be curbed and has enacted legislation. Mr. Garber further stated: "The Canadian Jewish Congress, speaking for the Jewish community in Canada, joins with all concerned citizens in welcoming the Prime Minister's announcement that the Government will place legislation before Parliament to curb hate propaganda. We are sure the great majority of Canadians will be pleased to have Parliament adopt effective laws to deal with this menace to Canadian freedom and democracy. The Canadian Jewish Congress in particular is gratified that its efforts over the past twelve years to have effective legislation of this kind enacted, now appear to be close to fruition. As has been pointed out on many occasions, the experience of history demonstrates that a democratic society cannot stand idly by and permit this social evil to pursue its aims unchecked. The effectiveness of laws as an educative force in society in itself makes it vital that such legislation be enacted and implemented. With it, public opinion will be more readily mobilized to reject the racist and hatemonger, and to ensure that the freedom we enjoy shall continue to prevail".

"Someone may be on the moon earlier than you think," he said.

A second major topic of discussion with Mr. Fanfani was the United Nations peace-keeping function, he said. The substantive and financial aspects of the organization's forces in Cyprus and in the Middle East, says the New York Times, constitute "a still unresolved great problem," he noted.

Brandeis U. Gets Grant For Second Year Of First U.S.-Wide Child Abuse Study

The U.S. Department of Health Education and Welfare, through its Children's Bureau, has awarded a research grant to a Brandeis University social scientist which will support the second year of the first nation-wide study of child abuse. The award to Dr. David G. Gil, associate professor of child welfare at Brandeis' Florence Heller Graduate School for Advanced Studies in Social Welfare, will make possible an analysis of every incident of child abuse reported throughout the United States during 1967. A more comprehensive analysis of the cases reported in 45 representative cities and counties will also be made.

The study of the "largely invisible phenomenon" of violence inflicted upon children by their parents and other adults, according to Dr. Gil, will assess the extent of the problem in the United States and the existing measures for dealing with it. The study, begun a year ago, is projected to last for several years, during which time researchers hope to uncover clues toward a reduction of "non-accidental, physical injury, including fatal injury, inflicted upon children by persons caring for them."

The research into child abuse is being carried on at a time of increasing awareness of the problem in the nation's press. "But," said Dr. Gil, "newspaper reports are often related to the sensational content of the incidents. There is, as yet, no knowledge of its extent." The nation-wide survey is facilitated at this time by the enactment of child-abuse-reporting laws in all states except Hawaii by the end of last May, Dr. Gil said. During 1967, the researchers expect over 6,000 incidents will be reported to authorities.

About 2,000 incidents are expected to be reported in the 45 communities which have been selected for special study. These were chosen on the basis of population size and regional distribution. Local social welfare agencies and juvenile courts in these areas will report details concerning each incident of abuse, including health, social welfare, and legal measures taken in dealing with the abuse.

Subsequent studies are planned to shed light on possible psychological dimensions of child abuse through a clinical interview with persons involved. Other studies will seek to reach incidents which may not have been reported to authorities through surveys of social welfare and medical agencies and household surveys. From all the studies, a set of comparative figures on child abuse in different cultural settings and in specific social groups will be developed.

"An understanding of environmental conditions adding to the problem is especially important," Dr. Gil said, "because these may be more easily controlled than psychological factors, and chances for prevention may thereby be increased. Child abuse seems to occur throughout the nation and throughout all ethnic and social groups of the population. The many known cases of death and/or severe physical damage resulting from child abuse constitute a severe problem. Many adults who have never abused their children in real life may be subject to abusive, aggressive and destructive fantasies and impulses directed toward them," he added.

Partial results from a national opinion survey conducted last year indicated that over one-half per cent of those interviewed admitted that they had lost control of themselves at least once and had abused a child. Over twenty per cent thought that they might at some time abuse a child, and about sixty per cent thought that almost anyone could at some time abuse a child in his care.

Dr. Gil, who served as director of research at the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children prior to coming to Brandeis, is former research associate and supervisor with the Association for Jewish Children in Philadelphia, Pa.; a caseworker and family life educator there; an assistant director of the Youth Probation Service in Israel; a teacher of in-service training programs for the Schools of Social Work in Jerusalem, Tel-Aviv, and Haifa; and a former United Nations Fellow, specializing in child and family welfare; and a counselor and teacher in institutions for neglected and delinquent children.

The research program is being conducted within the framework of the Florence Heller School, whose academic program is geared to doctoral education in social welfare.

The names of the 45 cities and counties which have been selected for special study will be released at a later date, when arrangements with local welfare agencies are complete. According to Dr. Gil, these communities are statistically representative of the entire nation.

The Florence Heller Graduate School for Advanced Studies in Social Welfare, organized in 1959, was made possible by an initial endowment from the late Mrs. Florence G. Heller, of Chicago. The school trains professional social workers for policy, planning, administrative, teaching and research positions in the social welfare field; develops research opportunities in areas which hold the promise of making significant contributions to theory and practice; and conducts a variety of community service seminars, institutes, and consultations.

KAHN-VIGODDA

The marriage of Miss Sharon Gayle Marcia Vigodda, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Vigodda, 193 Herchimer Avenue, Belleville, Ontario, to Henry Kahn, son of Mrs. Leopold Kahn, of Brooklin, Ont., and the late Mr. Kahn, was solemnized in Toronto, on Sunday, January 23, 1966, at one o'clock, by Rabbi David Monson. The bride was given in marriage by her parents. She wore an empire gown, of white, satin peau de soie; fashioned with a closely-fitted bodice, made with a scoop neckline; and elbow-length sleeves. The A-line skirt continued to a long train. Her waist-length veil of tulle illusion was caught to a white satin bow. She carried a prayer book with white orchids and carnations. Mrs. Leonard Vigodda, sister-in-law of the bride, was matron of honour. She wore a forest-green, peau de soie empire gown; made with a scoop neckline; three-quarter-length sleeves; and A-line skirt, with a slight train. She had a green satin head-band; and carried a cascade bouquet of yellow roses and white carnations. Dr. Fred Kahn, of California, was best man. There was orchestral music. A reception was held for the immediate family, and close friends. Red roses and pink carnations were the wedding flowers. Mrs. Vigodda, mother of the bride, wore a three-piece suit of brown, silk jersey; worked with gold-coloured thread; with a gold-coloured mesh hat; and had a bouquet of Talisman roses. Mrs. Kahn, mother of the groom, wore a two-piece suit of robin's egg blue crepe; the bodice encrusted with seed-pearl-beads. She had a beaded head-band; and a corsage of pink roses. Mr. and Mrs. Leopold Kahn went by car to spend their wedding trip in Mexico, the bride going away in a black and rust-coloured tweed suit; with a black fox collar; with a black, silk jersey blouse. They have taken up residence at 126 Cabot Street, Oshawa, Ont. Here for the marriage were: Leonard Vigodda, Oscar Vigodda, brothers of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Bert Kahn, Mr. and Mrs. Ernie Kahn, of Oshawa; Dr. Otto Kahn, of Brooklin, brothers, and sisters-in-law of the groom; Miss Linda Greenwood, of Montreal, Quebec; and Mrs. Edith Greenwood, of Picton, Ont.

MORRIS-EISEN

The marriage of Miss Carol Linda Eisen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Eisen, 42 Meadowbrook Avenue, to Lawrence Robert Morris, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Morris, 82 Cadillac Avenue, was solemnized at Shaarei Tefillah Synagogue, on September 2, 1965, at half-past six o'clock, by Rabbi Bernard Rosensweig. The bride was given in marriage by her father. She wore a white, silk faille gown, with a scooped neckline; a straight skirt; and a long-sleeved, lace coat. Her tulle illusion veil was shoulder-length; and her bouquet, of yellow orchids, and white carnations. Miss Judy Eisen, sister of the bride, was maid of honour; and wore a yellow organza gown; with a lace top. Miss Suzanne Morris, sister of the groom, was bridesmaid, in a yellow organza and lace gown. Dr. Lawrence Robert Resnick, cousin of the groom, was best man. The ushers were Lloyd Orson, Ronald Morris, of Chicago, Illinois; and Gerald Resnick, cousins of the groom; Richard Ross, Lawrence Raskin and John Morris. Yellow and white roses, carnations and chrysanthemums were the wedding flowers. The orchestra of Maurice Turk played; and two hundred guests were received. Mrs. Sidney Eisen, mother of the bride, wore a beige, brocade gown; a matching pill box hat; and a corsage of yellow and white roses and carnations. Mrs. George Morris, mother of the groom, wore a light blue, peau de soie gown; a matching pill-box hat; and a corsage of yellow and white roses and carnations. Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Robert Morris spent their wedding trip in New York and London, England; the bride going away in a teal-blue, two-piece wool suit, with a white blouse; and a black pill box hat. They reside in London, England, where Mr. Morris is doing post-graduate work, in electrical engineering, at the Imperial College; and Mrs. Morris is working on a Bachelor of Arts degree, at the University of London.

Cherchez La Mère . . . A Novel Theory Concerning Cultural Disparities In Israel

By Doris Lankin, in the Scopus Magazine, of the Hebrew University, in Israel

The sociologists and educationists ascribe the lower cultural level of the Oriental communities to the fact that the children are not brought up in an environment of learning; that their parents are for the most part illiterate; that they live in difficult social conditions, sleeping three to four in a bed, with no place to sit quietly and do homework; that they are required to contribute to the upkeep of the family at an early age; and to various other social and economic reasons.

But the fact is that even before a child from the Oriental communities goes to school, and needs a place to do homework, or is discouraged from having any pretentions towards learning by mundane parents who are concerned more about where his meals will come from than what his grades at school are, he is already lagging behind the Ashkenazi child in intellectual development. So much so that when he eventually starts going to school it is impossible for him to catch up, despite all attempts at lowering standards and levelling down the rate of learning to his capacity.

Amongst other educationists and psychologists who have been racking their brains to find the reason for this very early retardation in intellectual development is Dr. Gina Ortar, of the Hebrew University's School of Education, whose special field of interest is educational psychology.

She found herself at a loss to comprehend why living in an overcrowded apartment and sleeping three in a bed should affect the intellectual processes of a child who has no organic mental deformity. She also started thinking along non-conformist lines about children who live in equally poor social conditions in other parts of the world.

Having herself been born in Leningrad and brought up in Poland, Dr. Ortar naturally concentrated her thoughts on Eastern Europe in general and on the Jewish communities there in particular. The latter had often lived in conditions comparable to those of the Oriental communities in Israel. They had also had large families, occupying small, dark, cramped premises.

The mother of the family was very often illiterate, worked hard to keep her family fed, and clothed, and clean, and frequently even had to be the breadwinner, too, while the father spent his time at the Yeshiva. The older children helped with the younger ones and often earned a much-needed penny after school hours and in between doing their lessons. And yet there was no intellectual inferiority among the Jewish children of the East European ghettoes.

The secret, Dr. Ortar felt, lay in the attitude of the Ghetto mother towards her children, in the fact that no matter how busy or tired she might have been, she always had time to sing and prattle to her baby, to whisper in his ear all her hopes and dreams for his great future, to tell him tales and legends of the heroic deeds of his forefathers. In short, to start his little brain working at a very early age.

Enthused with, and excited by, the potentialities of this theory, Dr. Ortar started searching through all the educational literature she could lay hands on for some confirmation of her idea. She discovered an article in an American journal describing an experiment conducted with babies and toddlers of an impoverished orphanage.

These children were given into the daily care of 15-and 16-year old girls in a nearby institution for the mentally retarded. Each girl had her particular ward, to whom she talked and sang and with whom she played all day. After a short period of this arrangement the children's intelligence quotients were found to have risen miraculously, even though their constant companions had been mentally retarded girls.

Dr. Ortar was convinced she had found corroboration for her theory that by merely talking to a baby or toddler one contributed enormously to his mental development. She decided to seek further confirmation by visiting neighbourhoods inhabited by the Oriental communities.

There she found to her surprise that the women had much more time on their hands than is popularly assumed. They spent their spare time, however, sitting on stools outside their homes chatting incessantly amongst themselves and never giving a thought to conversing with their children, who amused themselves nearby as best they could. In fact, on being questioned, they replied unhesitatingly that children, who were already three years old, were still much too small to talk, or be talked to.

Dr. Ortar followed up her visits to the Oriental communities with visits to the mother-and-child clinics. There she found that in the waiting-rooms the Ashkenazi mothers tried to keep their children entertained and interested by talking to them while they waited their turn to see the doctor. But the Oriental mothers were laconic and curt with their youngsters, speaking to them only when absolutely necessary, although they were no less zealous in plying them with food than their Ashkenazi counterparts.

Convinced that she had sufficient basis for conducting a proper and scientific research into her theory, Dr. Ortar started trying to enlist the assistance of the educational authorities. At first she met with amused contempt for so "simple and childish" a theory. But being a dynamic, indomitable woman who, although a grandmother already, has the energy and enthusiasm of a teen-ager, she managed to persuade the sceptics to let her put her theory to the test.

At present she is conducting a research programme based on a selection of Oriental and Ashkenazi mothers of two children between the ages of one and three, coming from variegated social strata and having different degrees of education.

The research is aimed at discovering how mothers from these various groups talk to their small children and what kind of conversation has the most beneficial effect on the mental development of the children.

When the programme is completed, Dr. Ortar is convinced it will provide absolute confirmation of her revolutionary theory and that she will be able to use the results as a starting-point for teaching the Oriental mother how to talk to her babies if she wants them to grow up on an equal footing with their Ashkenazi neighbour's children.

It will indeed be most piquant if the "Yiddishe Mamma" who, according to the words of the song of that name, "found her jewels and her treasures in her baby's smile" should now be vindicated, despite the sneerers and scoffers against the "sentimental slush" which she epitomised, and should prove to be the great ideal for which every mother should strive.

At least it will be much less costly for the State, and take a great deal less time, to teach mothers how to talk to their infants than to solve all the social and economic problems of the new immigrant communities from the Oriental countries. The outcome of Dr. Ortar's studies is therefore awaited with considerable interest, in the hope that it may contribute towards the solution of a problem fraught with so much danger for the intellectual standard of the country.

CLASS IN COOKERY

one box frozen strawberries
one-half cup boiling water
one-half cup sugar
one-half cup melted margarine
one small package strawberry jelly dessert two and one-half cups graham cracker crumbs
one-half pint whipping cream

Combine first three ingredients in sauce pan. Heat, but do not boil. Add package of jelly dessert. Heat and stir until dissolved. Place in refrigerator for about two hours until it starts to jell. Combine graham cracker crumbs and margarine. Pat in an eight-by-eight-inch pan. Bake at three hundred and fifty degrees for ten minutes. Cool. Place jelly dessert mixture on base. Top with whipped cream. Refrigerate for at least one hour before cutting.

FRIED CHICKEN

Cut up a frying sized chicken in serving pieces. In a dish put oil, salt, pepper, garlic salt, and paprika. The oil should be red from the paprika. Dip each piece of chicken separately into the mixture. Put pieces of chicken into a brown paper bag which contains enough cornflake crumbs coat them. Shake the bag and put the well-coated chicken on a baking sheet. Bake at three hundred and fifty degrees for from three-quarters of an hour to one hour or until brown and tender.

This tropical orange cake is so light . . . so delicate it could only come from your own fragrant oven. Baking with Magic Baking Powder will always produce this kind of glorified result.

TROPICAL ORANGE CAKE

3 cups once-sifted pastry flour
OR 2-2/3 cups once-sifted all purpose flour
3 tsp. Magic Baking Powder
1 tsp. salt
3/4 cup Blue Bonnet Margarine or butter
1-1/2 cups granulated sugar
3 eggs, separated
2 tbsp. orange rind
1/2 cup milk
1 tsp. vanilla
3/4 cup orange juice

Grease 3, 8-inch round layer cake pans. Preheat oven to 350°F. (moderate). Sift together the flour, Magic Baking Powder and salt. Cream butter; gradually blend in sugar. Add egg yolks, one at a time, beating until very light. Mix in orange rind. Measure milk; add vanilla. Add flour mixture to creamed mixture in four parts alternately with milk and orange juice. Combine lightly after each addition. Beat egg whites until stiff; fold gently into batter. Bake in prepared pans 25 to 30 minutes.

Frosting: A fluffy butter frosting lightly flavoured with orange or lemon would be a most delightful addition to this cake.

Construction Tycoon Steps Up Again With Control Of Salada

Samuel Fingold, who was a little-known Toronto businessman until he bought a steel company and Canada's biggest construction firm recently, has picked up an $81,000,000 food concern to go with them, says the Toronto Globe and Mail.

Slater Steel Industries Ltd., of Hamilton, Mr. Fingold's corporate vehicle, acquired a "substantial interest" in Salada Foods Ltd. Slater already controls the Foundation group of construction companies.

For Mr. Fingold, the acquisition is a high point in a career that began in Mount Forest in 1937 when he bought the Roxy Theatre. (His claim to fame in Mount Forest is that he was a good tennis and baseball player.) During the next 20 years he added about 40 theatres, all of which were sold in 1956 and 1957. A two-year retirement followed, then he ventured into steel in 1960 and construction in 1962.

His move into the food industry is a big one. Salada sales last year were more than $80,000,000. The Toronto-based company produces a wide variety of food items in plants spread from Central America and the West Indies to the United States and Canada and across the Atlantic to Britain and Belgium.

The announcement which was made jointly by Mr. Fingold and Grant Horsey, chairman of Salada, did not disclose details of the transaction, but Mr. Fingold confirmed in an interview that the purchase had been for control.

Mr. Fingold organized Slater Industries Ltd. in Hamilton in the fall of 1960. It acquired the outstanding common shares of N. Slater Co. Ltd., a manufacturer of stampings, forgings, and other metal products.

About a year later, Slater acquired a forty per cent interest in Burlington Steel Ltd. and in February, 1962, the two companies were amalgamated to create Slater Steel Industries Ltd.

In March, 1962, Slater bought a 42 per cent interest in the Foundation Co. of Canada Ltd. of Toronto, which, with its subsidiaries, is Canada's largest engineering and construction company. He has increased his holding to 85 per cent of the common and 42 per cent of the preferred shares of Foundation, which was reorganized in 1963 as Canadian Foundation Co. Ltd.

ORTHODOX JEWS WILL CONFER NEXT MAY IN ISRAEL

The Union of Orthodox Jewish Congregations of America, in cooperation with similar international groups, will hold a special conference in Jerusalem next year, says Irving Spiegel, in the New York Times, to take up Jewish religious and cultural problems and to deal with such issues as poverty, hunger, and civil rights.

Details of the meeting, which is scheduled for next May, were outlined by Moses I. Feuerstein, national president of the Orthodox group. He said the Union of Israel Congregations would serve as host at the world meeting.

Mr. Feuerstein said delegates would discuss "the growing concern of Jewish religious leadership with the problems of assimilation, intermarriage, and other trends inhibiting the spiritual growth of Jewish communities, especially those isolated from the larger centers of religious life."

He said the conference would include delegates from Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, South America, Central America and Europe.

One of the main purposes of the meeting, Mr. Feuerstein said, "will be to establish permanent channels of communication for traditional [Orthodox] Judaism."

"This," he added, "will enable the Orthodox rabbinate and lay leadership to assume a more effective representation in all world Jewish and governmental bodies dealing with issues of contemporary religious, social, and political life."

Dr. Samuel R. Weiss, executive vice-president of the Union, said the conference would "go a long way towards bringing the relevance of our religious ideals to the campus and intellectuals everywhere."

It was also announced that the Rabbinical Council of America, largest Orthodox body in the U.S., would send a delegation that will actively participate in the deliberations.

Leaders of the Rabbinical Council stressed that the conference would seek to secure a greater degree of cooperation among Orthodox spiritual leaders throughout the world "to share their experiences, their knowledge, and their skills in tackling common problems of Jewish education, synagogue attendance, says the New York Times, and in instilling greater adherence to the teachings in the Torah."

FINAL DEADLINE FOR CLAIMS AGAINST GERMANY

The Canadian Jewish Congress announces that those claims against the German Government which became possible only through the Final Compensation Law ("BEG-Schlussgesetz") must be applied for by September 30, 1966.

Applications must actually have been received by the respective German authorities by September 30, 1966. The fact that they might only be mailed by that date would not be acceptable.

In particular, we wish to remind those who left the Eastern countries after October 1, 1953, that their claims must be received by the "Regierungspraesident, Cologne" by September 30, 1966.

Taking into account the High Holy Day period, beginning September 14, applications not yet made should be proceeded with immediately.

This reminder relates in particular also to clients of the United Restitution Organization (URO), represented in Canada by the Canadian Jewish Congress. Special URO offices are maintained across Canada: in Montreal at 2081 Aylmer Street (just below Sherbrooke Street West); in Toronto at 152 Beverley Street; in Winnipeg at 370 Hargrave Street; in Vancouver at 950 West 41 Street.

RE-EMERGENCE OF NATIONALISM

quences of the terrible debt of blood perpetrated in the name of Germany, not solely but mostly against Jews."

Referring to the discussion, he said the cry he heard more often from Germans than from Jews, was: "All this is to no avail! No one will be able to cross this mountain of corpses."

"It may be that my generation will not be allowed to see a new, free relationship between Germans and Jews," Dr. Gerstenmaier said, reports the New York Times. "Our misfortune began with the fact that most Germans, including the German Jews, assessed Hitler and the superficial aspects of National Socialism. They were naive enough to believe that the Nazis might be removed by the usual parliamentary methods."

WHEAT THAT SCORNS WATER

A hardy strain of wheat that can withstand the droughts which plague Israel in an average of every second year is being sought by a young Weizmann Institute scientist, who began his research in the midst of the Sinai Campaign. The story of his work was told recently by Ze'ev Galili, of Yediot Aharonot, a Tel Aviv newspaper. Here are some excerpts from Mr. Galili's article:

One day in December 1956, a young, dark-complexioned and husky Israeli strolled through the streets of El-Arish, in the Sinai Peninsula, then held by the Israel Army. He was in search of a commodity not very much in demand during those troubled days, grain seeds. After an exhausting search he succeeded in locating what he wanted in the hands of a local merchant, and after paying 25 agorot (8 cents) bought the goods to Israel.

It is quite possible that in the course of time these seeds will prove to be one of the valuable spoils secured by Israel in the Sinai Campaign. The research being conducted with these seeds indicates that the Israel farmers may eventually be able to reduce very much the threat and curse of drought. Dr. Dan Atzmon, who was born in Kibbutz Ein Harod, and is now on the staff of the Plant Genetics Section of the Weizmann Institute of Science, is the "crazy" young man who found time, in the middle of the Sinai Campaign, to think of drought problems. The idea of developing a variety of grain which could withstand drought conditions, which are plaguing Israel again this year, was born in Dr. Atzmon's mind over a decade ago.

At that time he was in Scandinavia on a trip where he studied, among other things, the development of frost-tolerant field crops. Dr. Atzmon thought it might also be possible to develop a variety of grain which could withstand the changeable Israel climate and produce yields even in drought years.

The idea was good, but how did one obtain the desired results? The method used by Dr. Atzmon, as by other geneticists, is not easy nor rapid. It involves a very long breeding project as well as genetic studies. If you have a variety of a plant which produces good yields but requires much water, and on the other hand have another variety of the same plant which gives a scant yield but succeeds in doing so even in dry years, you cross the two and receive after a few generations of selection a new variety which combines part of the positive characteristics of the two original strains. It is clear, therefore, that in order to develop the desired variety, you must first locate parent varieties having the characteristics in which you are interested, and which will be transferred to their progeny. The location of such varieties by Dr. Atzmon demanded exacting and persevering detective work which encompassed almost all four corners of the world.

From professional literature and from his own personal experience, Dr. Atzmon knew that there existed grain varieties which were relatively drought resistant. These were unsuitable for sowing in Israel since in drought years they would indeed produce yields, but in years of plentiful rainfall they would provide very low yields. However, these varieties were important to Dr. Atzmon because, he thought, they might be useful as parents to produce offspring with the characteristics he was seeking.

He approached numerous scientific institutions with the request that they send him seeds of drought-tolerant varieties. He also went on a tour, with the support of a Rockefeller Foundation grant, to Europe, the United States, India, and Australia, where he learned from the experiences of the scientists in those countries. In his efforts to acquire rare varieties, Dr. Atzmon also got in touch with Professor Zhukovsky, head of the Genetic Bank of the Botanical Institute at the University of Leningrad, who supplied him with 20 varieties of drought-tolerant seed. Seed was also received from Iran and Turkey through the U.N.'s Food and Agriculture Organization. From California Dr. Atzmon obtained a special shipment of hybrid barley seed developed by an American scientist named Simeson from almost all the world's varieties of barley. Dr. Atzmon also found interesting varieties among the Bedouins in Israel's Negev.

The practical research work began in 1962 with the help of a grant from the Bat Sheva de Rothschild Foundation. Dr. Atzmon concentrated initially on evaluating the drought tolerance of the various varieties under controlled conditions. Two special chambers were constructed with adjustable temperature and humidity. He wanted to determine if drought resistance depended on differences in rate of water loss, spread of root extension, and dates of flowering and ripening or, perhaps, on some additional factors.

The investigation showed that there is no hope of discovering a "cactus" variety of wheat with an especially high tolerance of water deficiency. However, it was found that the drought resistant varieties particularly excel in their ability to evade the worse consequences of drought conditions by rapid root development, reduction in the rate of water loss, and early ripening of the grain. The experiments with the Russian varieties were disappointing. On the other hand, one of the varieties brought by Dr. Atzmon from El-Arish, called "Beladi El-Arish," as well as varieties obtained from the Bedouin fields in the Negev, proved to be valuable. The varieties from California also proved to be a good source for early-ripening plants.

Of course, the conclusions briefly described here were only reached after extensive and tedious research. For example, the rate of root extension was studied by placing radioactive phosphorus at various depths in the soil where the plants grew. When the roots reached the depth at which the phosphorus was placed, this could immediately be detected in the leaves by means of a Geiger counter. The study showed that there are significant differences between different varieties in the rate of root extension. Barley roots grow more rapidly than do those of wheat, and there is a relationship between rapid plant development and rapid root extension.

After the characteristics of the various varieties were studied, Dr. Atzmon began crossing early-ripening ones with the standard varieties. Despite the fact that the research has already continued several years, the final goal has not yet been reached, that is, a variety which encompasses the drought tolerant characteristics of the Bedouin varieties and the high yields of the varieties currently grown by the Israel farmers. But in all research of this type many years must be invested in finding the varieties to be crossed, crossing them and then growing generation after generation of hybrids until a stable variety is obtained whose characteristics are indeed those being sought.

Dr. Atzmon and Elchanan Jacobs, who recently joined the project, feel obliged to explain that miracles are not to be expected in this research, since even the best variety will not be able to produce yields in the complete absence of rainfall. However, there is a reasonable possibility that the variety which will ultimately be developed will produce a good average annual yield in the marginal regions of Israel where drought damage is especially serious.

U.S. Embassy In Tel Aviv Pleased With Trade Fair

Exhibitors in the United States Pavilion reported sales of between $500,000 and $750,000 for the sixteen days of the International Trade Fair at Tel Aviv, Israel, which has closed. Chester E. Norris, Jr., commercial attaché at the United States Embassy, estimated that sales directly attributable to the fair would eventually reach several million dollars.

The Department of Commerce in Washington restricted displays to the categories of automobile maintenance equipment and hotel, restaurant, and catering equipment, says the New York Times. Nearly all the items exhibited were sold and only a few will be shipped back to the United States.

The buyers were mostly Israeli businessmen, but some sales were made to visitors from Cyprus. Although the display was strictly commercial, the pavilion attracted 357,000 adult visitors, according to an official count.

Minister Warns Worshipers Not To Become "Cold-Blooded Christians"

The Rev. Dr. David H. C. Read warned worshipers, says the New York Times, against becoming "cold-blooded Christians." Dr. Read, who preached on the topic "Religion — In Cold Blood" in the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, at 73rd Street, in New York, says the New York Times, said that when religious people are inhumane "they do more damage than any other."

"Cruelty at any time," he said, "is an abomination, but cruelty in the name of God is the most destructive blasphemy of all." The minister took as his subject four sentences from Truman Capote's best-seller, "In Cold Blood."

They were: "I didn't want to harm the man. I thought he was a very nice gentleman. Soft-spoken. I thought so right up to the moment I cut his throat."

The words were uttered as part of the confession of a young man who, with his partner in crime, broke into the home of a Kansas farmer in 1959 and murdered all four members of the family.

Dr. Read said the Capote book was sermon material because modern man, with his experience of genocide and war, "is tormented with the specter of meaningless destruction."

"And not very far away," he observed, "is the nightmare of an almost accidental, cold-blooded elimination of perhaps half the human race. We can imagine an ordinary man like us, surveying the ruins of mankind and saying: 'I didn't want to harm anyone. I thought I was doing right. I thought so right up to the moment I pressed the button.'"

In religion, Dr. Read cited some churchgoers of the Conservative Right who, he said, were "still so concerned with maintaining and defending the fundamentals of the faith that they cease to see their fellow-Christians with whom they disagree as real, honest, struggling, lovable human beings."

"They become monsters of iniquity," he said, "betrayers of the faith, corruptors of the young.

"It is possible for us to be so wrapped up on our creeds, or our rituals, that our religion loses the human touch that was the constant sign of Christ's presence. Surely we can be loyal to the convictions that are dear to us without ceasing to care for, respect, and love those who differ from us in either thought or practice."

Dr. Read saw "another danger of inhumanity" on the theological left, says the New York Times.

"I sometimes get the impression after wading through the books that contribute to the present theological debate, and listening to the arguments about religious language, the being of God, the secular gospel, and the like, that there is something cold-blooded about it all.

"After all, are we really concerned in the Christian church with, in the first place, abstract terms, with religious ideas, with schools of thought, — or with people?"

Nazi Killer Turns Up In Argentina, Courts Move To Extradite For Trial

Another Nazi criminal has turned up in Argentina but this time the wanted man, Gerhard J. B. Bohne, has been ordered to Germany to face trial, according to a report from the World Jewish Congress in Buenos Aires.

Bohne, a one-time lawyer, was part of the infamous Nazi team responsible for the planning and execution of Hitler's euthanasia program. With psychiatrist Werner Heyde and another major accomplice, Friedrich Tillman, both of whom committed suicide in Germany before coming to trial, Bohne participated in the planning of the Nazi action by which mentally ill persons in German institutions were exterminated. He was also involved in the establishment and camouflaging of the death chambers, and in the selection of the Nazi execution squads which later were responsible for the deaths of masses of Jews.

Bohne, who is now sixty-three, used his legal skills to draft instructions and orders so that the whole gruesome plan, which formed the pattern for methods used in the 'final solution' of the Jews, should be kept secret.

Despite his conscientious application of the Nazi murder methods, Bohne ran afoul of Himmler for complaining about the behavior of fellow murderers involved in the extermination program. Himmler shipped Bohne off to a battle unit and he was captured by United States forces in 1944. He managed to escape trial at the end of the war and, when released from a POW (prisoner of war) camp, went to work in a German law office.

Two years later he slipped into Argentina and remained there, unnoticed, until 1955. Then, exactly a decade after Hitler's downfall, Bohne traveled back to Germany and settled down to live on a pension granted him as a former civil servant.

By that time, however, evidence was being collected, and witnesses sought for a number of trials of Nazi criminals. Bohne was among those investigated and he was picked up by the German police. The investigation into his complicity in the euthanasia program was long drawn out and, in 1963, his counsel secured his release from prison on medical grounds.

Bohne worked fast. He obtained false travel papers, fled from Germany and turned up briefly in Chile. Recalling that he had previously spent several years in Argentina, the German authorities looked for him in that country. Within a short time he was found by the police and held pending extradition.

Using every possible loophole, lawyers retained by Bohne delayed his extradition by pleading that his Nazi-era activities had been political rather than criminal. But the Argentinian Court of Appeals threw out this argument and ordered that their ruling be transmitted to the Argentinian Foreign Ministry so that arrangements could be made for Bohne's return to face trial in Germany.

There is still one avenue open to Bohne, an appeal to the Argentinian Supreme Court. This tribunal, the country's highest court, will probably receive the case in the near future.
